To the Teacher

These reading response prompts are designed to encourage your students to read more effectively and with more pleasure by giving them interesting subjects to write about after they have read. Many of the prompts will take them directly into the text, while others will give them an opportunity to express their thoughts and feelings and to reflect on their own experiences.

A second purpose of the reading response prompts is to facilitate instruction in ways that work for you in the classroom. The organization of the prompts makes them easy to use, and the content and construction of the prompts are designed to develop students' knowledge and academic skills.

The Organization of the Reading Response Prompts:

- The reading response prompts are organized to follow the story chronologically; prompts that address the story as a whole generally are offered after major points in the story have been addressed.
- The variety of prompts makes it possible to assign them in meeting specific instructional objectives. If you want your students to decide what they will write about, the number of prompts gives them a real choice.
- Writing responses to all the prompts, or even reading all of them, constitutes a mini-review of the story.

The Content and Construction of the Reading Response Prompts:

- All the prompts relate directly to the story and focus on developing students' knowledge, literary skills, and self-expression.
  - Many are designed to direct students' attention to literary elements in the story: setting, plot, characters, conflicts, themes, symbolism, motifs, irony, mood, and so on.
  - Each prompt also addresses one or several Common Core ELA standards.
  - All are designed to use the story as a springboard for thinking, exploring ideas, making observations, and expressing personal feelings.
- Each set of reading response prompts includes some that are less challenging (LC) and some that are more challenging (MC). Most of the prompts fall somewhere in the middle. In addition to the less and more challenging prompts, we have identified prompts that encourage self-expression. These are designated as Free Write/Text-to-Self prompts.
  - Individual prompts are not identified by degree of difficulty. You will find a list of their designations in the Teacher's Key.
  - Less challenging prompts are brief and easier to read. They generally feature one question for students to consider; if they are text-based, they address a limited portion of the story.
