>> >. They are to be fulfilled in order to be accepted, i. e. for admission Sounds good to me. ----- Requirement on... could you give me examples of the precise context and meaning where it would be appropriate to use this collocation?- if the elaboration of the tables is required (that is mandatory), can I say that there is a requirement on the elaboration of the tables? or would this mean that the elaboration of the tables is subject to certain requirement? By my understanding, "for" should work here. Thank you very much for any remarks regarding this issue. You are quite welcome. I think you can say- the requirement of somebody/something (with authority) for something (a purpose), as in- In my judgment and for the reasons which I have given, the challenge based upon the implication of a requirement of natural justice must fail. And I think you can also say- the requirement of something (one of the things that is required) for something, as in- Although the requirement of intervention in the nasal oxygen group was halved, the most important requirement for the success of the operation was the operation and management of the vessels to provide those services. 55. I don't understand the sentences about obligatory elaboration of tables, so I thought I would summarise what I think rather than respond directly... requirement on AAAAA is a person or something that is required to do something... requirement of AAAAA is a person or something that has required someone to do something... requirement for AAAAA is something that is required. I have obtained more examples about using "requirement for/of" from dictionaries for sharing- Latin is no longer a requirement for entry to university He has filled all the requirements for promotion A good degree is a minimum requirement for many jobs. The requirements of his work affected his health. Food is a requirement of life. Students who fail to meet the requirements (of the course) will fail. I believe in "requirement for something (needed)" requirement actually means demand, as in-... an urgent requirement for time, facilities, resources, or action When we say "requirement for something (a purpose/goal)", the requirement is something that has to be obtained/achieved for the purpose. Thanks everyone! So it seems that the only correct option in my case would be "We do not support the requirement for the obligatory elaboration of the tables." although it probably isn't understandable for certain native speakers...The obligatory elaboration of certain correlation tables is the "requirement". We may want either the requirement of the obligatory elaboration of the tables, or the requirement for the obligatory elaboration of the tables. I think the requirement for the obligatory elaboration of the tables is the correct one, because the requirement of the obligatory elaboration of the tables is the requirement for the obligatory elaboration of the tables. That is, in order to be able to fulfill the obligatory elaboration, you must be literate. I am sorry if I was too confusing but your replies definitely helped me. I am really not sure if I understand your situation. I hope the following may help- Regarding "We do not support the requirement for the obligatory elaboration of the tables." I think I would say- We do not support obligatory elaboration. We are against obligatory elaboration. We do not support the requirement of obligatory elaboration. Regarding "the (legal) requirement for the obligatory elaboration", I would say- The obligatory elaboration is a legal requirement. Regarding "literacy is the requirement for the obligatory elaboration", I would say- Literacy is essential for the obligatory elaboration. Literacy is required for the obligatory elaboration. >> >.
