Try a different method Is the center tap negative or positive on the charger for the 700 peak? Your manual lacks details for the loading device. Could be 24 volt AC, could be 12 volt DC Center Tap negative, could be the center 15 volt Posure positive ... It could be something! I expect to see a rating of polarity, voltage and current, however, we don't see any. We also don't know what the circuit is inside of this. I can't make assumptions there. Most likely they have a shock absorber to control the impedance and some circuits for USB, etc., etc. Don't know the design or what's going on inside the device. Can you specify with 100% certainty? No, you can't. Not without details. To determine a compatible load unit, you will need the following information: 1) Specified center of polarity (positive or negative). 2) Voltage (i.e. 12 volts to 24 volts, etc., etc.) 3) Specified current (I.E. 400 MA) 5) The size of the plug (I.E. 2.1 MM) A number of part would be great! Just guessing at polarity is a roll of the dice. Don't play games. Know the facts! You may have preventative to avoid damaging the unit if you use the wrong polarity, but you don't know it. Until you find the MFG specs. MFG. Just to plug it in. You could ruin it.
Is that an acceptable risk? It's not, not for me. I have an email at the distributor and will update it based on your comments and findings.
