Every language in the world has verb tenses. These tenses, which refer to the present, past, and future, explain when something — such as an action, event, or state -- happened. The problem is that although all languages have verb tenses or use them in a similar way. That's why English tenses are often confusing to ESL students. Chart 2 gives an example of each tense, in active and passive form. Chart 3 provides time words and expressions commonly used with the verb tenses, to help you recognize when to use each tense. You will get the answers and your score at the end of the English language, I have come across your videos on Youtube. All your videos, I'd say, are very instructive and informative. Thanks for sharing the gift of wisdom to everyone. By the way, hope you could make a comprehensive lesson about the English tenses. I, being a second language learner too, understand the difficulty of those who are also studying your language. One of which is tense usage. Maybe, some would argue that it's easy as there are grammar books that prescribe it usage. However, I don't find it that much helpful in dealing with complex structures, not to add, of course, the exceptions. In all of my readings, I have seen discussed on grammar books about the use of the tenses, but, I feel, disconnection in it and it's not enough to foreground or give any second language learner a better grounding of the English language. I hope you could come up with a lesson that deals on how tenses operate in Clauses and what circumstances affect it. I have few examples below What she said IS true versus What she said WAS true. The man who went there last night IS my friend versus The Man who went there last night WAS my friend. Hope you'll be able to provide a discussion about the grammatical accuracy of those sample sentences whether they are acceptable usage or not and what are the semantical differences in the meaning if this structure is permissible. Thanks heaps! Quiz Test your understanding of this English lesson Test your understanding of the English lesson by answering these questions.
