Adverbs are incredibly common in English. You probably use hundreds of them every day, even if youre not quite sure what an adverb is. An adverb is a word that modifies a verb, adjective, other adverbs, or adverbial phrases. There are different kinds of adverbs, which you can learn more about in our article Six Types Of Adverbs Used In The English Language. In this article, we are going to cover examples from each of six categories and how to properly use them in a sentence.The six common categories of adverbs are:conjunctive adverbsadverbs of frequencyadverbs of timeadverbs of manneradverbs of degreeadverbs of placeOne thing to keep in mind is that there can be some overlap or repetition across the different categories of adverbs, because words can have more than one meaning or use depending on the context. For example, yet can be a conjunction, meaning though, but it can also be an adverb of time, in the sense in the time still remaining. Conjunctive adverbs A conjunction is any word that connects words, phrases, clauses, or sentences. They express the relationship between ideas or parts of speech. A conjunctive adverb is an adverb that acts like a conjunction.Conjunctive adverbs are often set off from the rest of the sentence by a comma. For example:We dont have time to run to the store. Besides, you already have cereal at home.Conjunctive adverbs can also go at the end of a sentence, in which case they dont need to be set off with a comma, as in:I didnt really want a pony anyway.List of conjunctive adverbs:accordinglyadditionallyalsoanywaybesidescertainlyconverselyfinallyhencehoweverin steadin conclusionlatelyleikewisemoreovernamelyneverthelesssothenyet Adverbs of frequency Adverbs of frequency detail at what rate over time an action or event occurs. They answer the question How often?Adverbs of frequency generally go just before the verb they are modifying.She always orders chocolate cake.My brother will never get over it.List of adverbs of frequency:alwaysusuallyoftenometimesrarelynevereverhardly everoccasionallyseldomgenerallyfrequentlynormallyonce twice Adverbs of time Adverbs of time describe when things occur. They answer the question When? Adverbs of time are very flexible: they can go at the beginning of a sentence set off with a comma, right before the verb or clause they are modifying, or at the end of a sentence. It depends on the adverb and how it is being used in the sentence. For example:Tomorrow, the class is going to the zoo.We last saw her before dinner.Are you going to Paris next?List of adverbs of time:tomorrowtonightyesterdaynowthen todayalreadydailylastnextpreviouslyafterafterwardsearlylatelatersincesestilljustseldom Adverbs of manner Despite their name, adverbs of manner arent necessarily polite. Manner here means a way of doing, being done, or happening. Adverbs of manner answer the question How? Adverbs of manner can go before or after the verb or phrase they are modifying. For example:The students quickly ate their lunches.Our mayor spoke loudly and authoritatively.List of adverbs of manner:wellfaststraighthardloudlyproudlysuspiciouslystrangelykindlyeasilyrudelyneatlyquicklygenerouslyeagerlyaccidentallyrapidlyhungrilyfoolishlycheerfullyreally (can also be adverb of degree in sense of very) We use pronouns every day. Even the word we is a pronoun! Learn about the types of pronouns with examples of each and how to use them in sentences. Adverbs of degree Adverbs of degree describe intensity or quantity of an action. They answer the question How much? Typically, adverbs of degree go before the verb or part of speech being modified. For example:We were too hungry to talk during the meal.The little puppy was extremely energetic.List of adverbs of degree:lotssomewhatbarelyverymuchmostnearlytooextremelyenoughsoslighlyespeciallyjustalmostscarcelyvirtuallyfullyfarexceptionally Adverbs of place describe location. They answer the question Where? Adverbs of place typically go after the verb or other part of the speech they are modifying. For example:I think your sister is upstairs.Go toward the big tree, then make a left.List of adverbs of place:behindabovenearbybackward(s)toward(s)outsidewithinsidearoundoververseascloseawayupstairsdownstairsherewhereeverywheredeeplynext-door Take the quiz Quickly, make your way over to our adverbs quizzes. When lead is used as an irregular verb (pronounced [ lead ]), its past tense form and past participle form is led, as in He has led meetings in the past. As a noun, lead has several meanings related to being in the first or foremost position or place (in which case its pronounced [ lead ]). But lead is also used as a noun to refer to the metal (in which case its pronounced [ led ], identically to the past tense and past participle forms of the irregular verbwhich is likely the source of most of the confusion). Much less commonly, lead can be used as a regular verb (past tense form leaded) in the context of using the metal lead or adding it to something (in which case its also pronounced [ led ]). When to use led or lead As an irregular verb, lead (pronounced [ lead ]) has many different meanings, including very commonly used senses such as to show the way, to guide, to cause, to bring, to command, and to have top position or first place in.For example:I hope to lead the race after the first lap.After your promotion, you will lead the marketing department.The sheepdogs are trained to lead sheep into the pens.Experts predict that inflation will lead to less consumer spending.When used this way, lead is considered an irregular verb because its past tense and past participle form is led (not leaded).For example:I led the race after the first lap.Erin has led the marketing department since her promotion.The sheepdogs led the sheep into the pen.Inflation has led to less consumer spending.Lead can also be used as a noun with many different meanings relating to people or things being in a foremost position. For these senses, its pronouned [ lead ]. Which should you use, burnt or burned? The confusion around the words lead and led is likely due to the fact that lead is also used as a noun in the sense of the metal. This sense of lead is pronounced identically to led, which can be especially confusing in speech when you cant see the different spellings.There is also a much less commonly used verb sense of lead (pronounced [ led ]) that relates to using the metal lead in some way, such as by treating them with it or adding it to them. This sense is a regular verbthe past tense and past participle form is leaded.You can avoid some confusion by remembering that the word led is only ever used as the past tense or past participle of lead. Another verb that can follow the same pattern as the irregular verb lead is plead. However, plead can use pled or pleaded as its past tense and past participle form. Are you guilty of not knowing whether to use pled or pleaded? Find out with our guide. The irregular verb read (pronounced [ reed ]) changes pronunciation for its past tense and past participle form, but not spelling: it continues to be spelled read, but its pronounced [ red ].Although its spelled slightly differently, the irregular verb lead follows a conjugation pattern similar to a number of irregular verbs that end in -eed and rhyme with it. These change in both spelling and pronunciation for their past tense and past participle forms.For example:present tensepast tensepast participleleadledbledbledbledfeedfedfedbreedbredbredspeedspeedsped Examples of led and lead used in a sentence Lets look at some example sentences that show the different ways that lead and led are used.We need someone who can lead us through the good times and the bad.The depressing tone led me to believe the movie wasnt going to have a happy ending.The senator led a panel about the dangers of lead in drinking water.I had been led on a wild goose chase by the rumors of lost pirate treasure.The lead investigator discovered a lead that led her to believe that the businessman had begun to lead an illegal lead mining operation.
