The Hawaiian flag is a unique and symbolic representation of the island's rich history and diverse influences. It's a design that not only reflects the cultural heritage of Hawaii but also its political history. Understanding what the flag looks like involves appreciating its elements, colors, and the story behind its creation. So what does the Hawaiian flag look like? The Hawaii flag is unique among U.S. state flags. It features: • Eight horizontal stripes alternating in white, red, and blue. These represent the eight main islands of Hawaii: Hawai'i, Moloka'i, O'ahu, Kaua'i, and Ni'ihau. • The Union Jack (the flag of the United Kingdom) in the canton (upper left corner). This reflects the historical ties between Hawaii and Great Britain. This unique combination of elements makes the Hawaiian flag is as compelling as its design. The flag was commissioned by King Kamehameha I in 1816, making it one of the oldest flags still in use today. The inclusion of the Union Jack in the Hawaii flag reflects the political alliances and diplomatic efforts of the time. King Kamehameha I sought to maintain Hawaii's independence while establishing beneficial relationships with powerful nations, including Great Britain. During the early 19th century, Hawaii found itself at the crossroads of global politics. The Hawaiian flag was designed to acknowledge and honor these relationships, particularly with Britain, while also representing from the Kingdom of Hawaii to its status as a U.S. territory and eventually becoming the 50th state of the United States in 1959. • British Influence: British Royal Navy offered protection to the Hawaiian Kingdom, and many of Kamehameha's advisors were British. Hence, it's no surprise that the Union Jack found its way onto the Hawaii flag. • American Inspiration: The United States was also a growing power in the Pacific, and American traders and missionaries played an important role in Hawaii's development. The alternating red, white, and blue stripes of the Hawaiian flag bear a striking resemblance to the American flag, though the exact inspiration remains a subject of debate. It consists of a field of eight horizontal stripes, in the sequence of white, red, blue, whi only U.S state flag to contain the flag of a foreign country. The use of the Union Jack is a legacy of the British Royal Navy's historical relations with the Hawaiian Kingdom and, in particular, the pro-British sentiment of its first ruler, King Kamehameha I. Despite the design including the British Union Jack, Hawai'i never was a colony of the British Empire. The current design has been in use since 1845. It was retained by the Republic of Hawaii after the overthrow of the Hawaii monarchy in 1898, no change was made to the flag design used by the Territory of Hawaii before Hawaii was granted statehood. The flag's eight stripes represent the main islands of the Hawaiian archipelago. Red Ensign of Great Britain (1707-1800) Captain George Vancouver of the British Royal Navy visited the Hawaiian Islands were divided among several warring chiefdoms. In February 1794, while at anchorage in Kealakekua Bay off the island of Hawaii, Vancouver reached a diplomatic agreement with the king (or ali'i) of that island, Kamehameha, who would later unite all the Hawaiian Kingdom. Vancouver believed that the agreement reached meant Hawaii Island was being ceded to Great Britain but historians have argued that the Hawaiians saw the agreement as establishing a protectorate.[3] After the proceedings on Vancouver's vessel, a British Union Jack, [4][5] or a Red Ensign as used by the Royal Navy, which features a Union Jack in the canton.[6][7][b] In 1801, the British Union 1815), Kamehameha became aware of the nationalist meaning of flags. To avoid offending either side, he designed a new flag for his kingdom which combined elements of both the British Union Jack and the flag of the United States in 1815 with 15 red and white stripes Flag of the East India Company One version of Flag of Hawaii, 1816-1845 (1:2 canton, 9 stripes) In April 1816, Kamehameha purchased a brig from Scottish Captain Alexander Adams, and arranged for Adams to take command of the ship, which was renamed Ka'ahumanu. As part of the transfer ceremony, Adams wrote that he was "honored to take command under the Flag of His Majesty" [10] though he does not describe the flag. The next year, in March 1817, the Ka'ahumanu became the first Hawaiian ressel to sail to a foreign port (Canton, China) under a "distinct" Hawaiian flag. [11] In one source, this is described as: "A St. George and St. Andrews Cross in the corner filled in with blue, with field consisting of red and white stripes "red, white stripes added to a Union Jack".[12] The Russian navigator Vasily Golovnin, based on a visit to Oahu in 1818, describes seeing a "national flag" which "consists of seven stripes: red, white, blue, red, white, blue, red, white, blue and red, with the English Union Jack in the corner".[9]:185 Until 1845, visitors to the Hawaiian Islands reported various versions of the flag with different numbers of stripes and colors.[13][10] State flag (1845-present) In 1843, either as an inadvertent mistake, or as a symbolic "reversal" gesture in the wake of the Paulet affair - a five-month-long, unofficial occupation of Hawaii by a British naval officer - the flag design was specified to have eight stripes: a white, red, blue, white, red, bl remains the same design as used today.[14][13] The flag of Hawaii flying in Haleakalā National Park The canton of the flag mast. It consists of a field of eight horizontal stripes, in the sequence of white, red, blue, white, red, blue, white, red, blue, white, red with a British Union Jack depicted as a canton (placed in the upper-left corner). First adopted in the mid 19th century by the Hawaiian Kingdom, it became the official state flag when Hawaii was admitted as the 50th state of the United States in 1959. It is also the only U.S state flag to contain the flag of a foreign country. The use of the Union Jack is a legacy of the British Royal Navy's historical relations with the Hawaiian Kingdom and, in particular, the pro-British sentiment of its first ruler, King Kamehameha I. It was retained by the Republic of Hawaii after the overthrow of the Hawaii before Hawaii was granted statehood. The flag's eight stripes represent the main islands of the Hawaiian Islands on three occasions during his 1791 to 1795 expedition. At this time, the Hawaiian Islands were divided among several warring chiefdoms. In February 1794, while at anchorage in Kealakekua Bay off the island of Hawaii, Vancouver reached a diplomatic agreement with the king (or ali'i) of that island, Kamehameha, who would later unite all the Hawaiian islands and become the first ruler of the Hawaiian Kingdom. Vancouver believed that the agreement reached meant Hawaii Island was being ceded to Great British Union Jack,[4][5] or a Red Ensign as used by the Royal Navy, which features a Union Jack in the canton.[6][7][b] In 1801, the British Union Jack added a Saint Patrick's Cross when Ireland joined with Great Britain in a political union. Both pre- and post-1801 versions of the Red Ensign served as the unofficial flag of the Hawaiian Kingdom until 1816.[5] There is an unverified anecdote that, during the War of 1812 (fought between the United Kingdom and the United States from 1812 to 1815), Kamehameha became aware of the nationalist meaning of flags. To avoid offending either side, he designed a new flag for his kingdom which combined elements of both the British Union Jack and the United States at that time [7][9]: 197 Red Ensign of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland Flag of the United States in 1815 with 15 red and white stripes Flag of the East India Company One version of Flag of Hawaii, 1816-1845 (1:2 canton, 9 stripes) In April 1816, Kamehameha purchased a brig from Scottish Captain Alexander Adams, and arranged for Adams to take command of the ship, which was renamed Ka'ahumanu. As part of the transfer ceremony, Adams wrote that he was "honored to take command under the Flag of His Majesty"[10] though he does not describe the flag. The next year, in March 1817, the Ka'ahumanu became the first Hawaiian vessel to sail to a foreign port (Canton, China) under a "distinct" Hawaiian flag.[11] In one source, this is described as: "A St. George and St. Andrews Cross in the corner filled in with blue, with field consisting of red and white stripes added to a Union Jack".[12] The Russian navigator Vasily Golovnin, based on a visit to Oahu in 1818, describes seeing a "national flag" which "consists of seven stripes: red, white, blue, red, white, blue and red, with the English Union Jack in the corner".[9]: 185 Until 1845, visitors to the Hawaiian Islands reported various versions of the flag with different numbers of stripes and colors.[13][10] State flag (1845-present) In 1843, either as an inadvertent mistake, or as a symbolic "reversal" gesture in the wake of the Paulet affair - a five-month-long, unofficial occupation of Hawaii by a British naval officer - the flag design was specified to have eight stripes: a white stripe on top followed by the sequence red, blue, white, red, blue, whit May 25, 1845 at the opening of the legislative council and remains the same design as used today.[14][13] The flag of Hawaii flying in Haleakalā National Park The canton of the legislative council and remains the union Flag of Hawaii flying in Haleakalā National Park The canton of the flag is composed of eight horizontal stripes, symbolizing the eight major islands (Hawai'i, Maui, Kaho'olawe, Lāna'i, Moloka'i, O'ahu, Kaua'i, and Ni'ihau). The color of the stripes, from the top down, follows the sequence: white, red, blue, white the Hawaiian flag is proportioned differently - the Union Jack in the canton is in a 4:7 ratio.[1] Official version of the Hawaiian Flag Non-standard variant using a 1:2 canton and the U.K. standard colors, similarly to the official flags of British Overseas Territories In 2001, a survey conducted by the North American Vexillological Association (NAVA) placed Hawaii's flag 11th in design quality, out of the 72 U.S. and Canadian provincial, state, and territorial flags ranked.[15] In 1990, Governor of Hawaii John Waihee proclaimed July 31 to be Lā Hae Hawaiian Flag Day. It has been celebrated each year since then.[16] It is the same date as Lā Ho'iho'i Ea, Sovereignty Restoration Day, a holiday of the Hawaiian Kingdom that is celebrated by proponents of the Hawaiian sovereignty movement. Simeona claims to have found evidence of the Kanaka Maoli flag in the state archives, though any sources he may have used have not been unsuccessful. Louis "Buzzy" Agard had proposed a Hawaiian flag design in 1993 which featured nine alternating stripes and the same charge as on the Kanaka Maoli flag, [24] leading many to believe it is where Simeona drew his inspiration.[23] Despite the lack of verification about its historic use, the design is popular among those who prefer its lack of apparent colonial imagery.[19] Personal Standard of King Kalakaya Personal Standard of Princess Kajulani Naval Ensign of the Hawajian Kingdom, with the only known use of this flag being on the Kaimiloa Naval Jack of the Hawaiian Kingdom, flown on the bowsprit of the Kaimiloa Flag of the Kuhina Nui in the Hawaiian Kingdom The inverted Hawaiian King Organization Flag of Nation of Hawaii 1868 flag chart Hawaiian quilt from Waimea, before 1918 Proposed 49 star American flag from 1941[25] The Hawaii state flag as depicted in a 1976 Bicentennial Series postage stamp Digital reconstruction of the flag carried by Hawaii 1868 flag chart Hawaii portal From Waimea, before 1918 Proposed 49 star American flag from 1941[25] The Hawaii portal From Waimea, before 1918 Proposed 49 star American flag from 1941[25] The Hawaii portal From Waimea, before 1918 Proposed 49 star American flag from 1941[25] The Hawaii portal From Waimea, before 1918 Proposed 49 star American flag from 1941[25] The Hawaii portal From Waimea, before 1918 Proposed 49 star American flag from 1941[25] The Hawaii portal From Waimea, before 1918 Proposed 49 star American flag from 1941[25] The Hawaii portal From Waimea, before 1918 Proposed 49 star American flag from 1941[25] The Hawaii portal From Waimea, before 1918 Proposed 49 star American flag from 1941[25] The Hawaii portal From Waimea, before 1918 Proposed 49 star American flag from 1941[25] The Hawaii portal From Waimea, before 1918 Proposed 49 star American flag from 1941[25] The Hawaii portal From Waimea, before 1918 Proposed 49 star American flag from 1941[25] The Hawaii portal From Waimea, before 1918 Proposed 49 star American flag from 1941[25] The Hawaii portal From Waimea, before 1941[25] The Hawaiian Kingdom Seal of Hawaii List of flags by design List of Hawaii State Legislature.
