Using a simple technique with advanced buildings, you can ensure that your city has an unlimited water supply to work with. Just don't think too hard about it... advertisementThe dirty truth is that the sewage treatment plant not only takes in raw sewage, but converts it to water and dumps it back into the water table. The rate of sewage treatment climbs with, but is always faster than, water pumping. Ergo, simply place a water pumping station next to a sewage treatment plant, and there you go: unlimited water! To minimize illness, simply be sure that your water pumping station uses the water filtration pump modules, rather than the standard water pumps. As long as all the station's pumps are the filtration kind, it won't matter how dirty it is: your Sims will have nice, clean, fresh water to drink for the rest of their lives. Just don't let them know where it comes from. While the technique can work anywhere, you're best served placing your sewage treatment plant and water pumping station back-to-back in a centrally located area. It still works if they're side-by-side, but you won't be able to pull as much water that way since the radius of water dumping around the sewage treatment plant is a little small. Update 7 will include a road terraforming tool so you dont need to glitch a way to make tunnels or overpasses or even just a highway. Other bug fixes will be in there too, just dont know much more than that in Update 7 for now. You can shut down upgrades you have made to your buildings. While this may not appear to be important, it can be quite helpful in some situations.For instance, you can:advertisementShut down all reactors of your nuclear power plant. It will not generate any power but no meltdowns will occur either, allowing you to place the power plant even if you cannot train the employees yet.Shut down patient rooms and ambulances in your hospital/clinic. They won't function but you won't be charged Simoleons for them either.Shut down garages of fire stations.Shut down jail cells and the car lots of police stations.Shut down town/city hall (warning: this closes all services that require the Hall such as garbage, fire, health, police, etc.)The obvious draw back is that you pay a lot of simoleons to place them and then get nothing in return. However, you are only charged hourly for the upgrades that are functioning. So if you do not have an immediate need for them, you don't have to pay for them either. This allows you to plan ahead and place your infrastructure in advance without constraining your current income too much. Also suddenly having twice the number of firetrucks, ambulances, and patient rooms during and shortly after a disaster is quite helpful for dealing with the situation. Turn them off when it's business as usual again to save yourself lots of simoleons. There are some advantages of doing it this way instead of just shutting the whole building down. Turning the modules on gives an instant benefit. The buildings don't go looking for workers before becoming active.The buildings are already powered and watered (turning on a nuclear reactor will incese water consumption drastically though).The basic building is still functioning. So normally you are charged 1,700 Simoleons/hour for 50 patient rooms for just the basic hospital. However, in times of crisis, that same hospital can have 350 patient rooms and 8 ambulances for the increased price of 8,900 simoleons/hour. This saves you 7,200 simoleons/hour when you don't need them.To do this, simply go to the building editor and click on the upgrade your want to turn off/on. A small box will pop up telling you its current cost. Click the on/off button at the bottom of this box. If the button is red and the cost is 0 simoleons/hour, than the module is turned off. To run a HQ is expensive, the cost to run an electronics HQ is $450 an hr and once you have a consumer electronics division it will cost you an additional $400 an hr. However once you have plopped any of the HQ and any of its additions you can turn the power to that building off. When the building is off you will still gain the experience (usually amount of simoleans made) to get your next upgrade but, won't have to pay the cost of running it. (NOTE 1: This method means that the trade port will not allow you to build any of the specialized lots until the power is turned back on, but once the power is back on and the place has workers you will again gain full access, then you can plop what you need and again turn them off.) (NOTE 2: you can also use the above method to turn off a specific addition of a HQ as well) advertisementYou can trick the taxpayers by increasing or decreasing taxes at the right timing. With this you can get huge amounts of money and increase your density easily without repercussions. Taxes are counted at and paid for at xx.03 every hour.Pause the game at xx.02 and increase all tax rates to maximumUnpause til its xx.03, receive the money and quickly pause it againReturn the tax rates to normalAlso if you want you can set the tax rates to 0% to boost the happiness of your RCI and increase their density asap. just make sure you set it at the right timing so you dont suffer losses. A llama can be seen in the tornado if you look closely.When viewing the details of certain medium-wealth commercial buildings, music from the original version of "The Sims" can sometimes be heard.One building in the tutorial has the emblem from Spore.The 'entering city' load screen displays some repeats from previous SimCity versions (e.g., herding llamas...)Was this guide helpful?The Little Mermaid - Official Teaser TrailerCheck out the teaser trailer for The Little Mermaid, the upcoming live-action reimagining of the animated musical classic.
