I see recently they made some changes so that now the "questions and answers" disappear so one can't search a closed auction/s hoping to find contact details. I used to do this a bit, not to deal outside TM, but to contact someone who is a "once a week" emailer, or to ask for a relist when they have no current listings. That's up to the seller to help with by providing the best description possible. It sucks, and it means TM isn't suitable for selling a lot of stuff, but tough, it's their rules. I generally use Trade Me when listing jobs but have had average results. Is Seek any better? So far my theory has been most job seekers will look at both job boards.As a job seeker, I use both, but if I had to pick one it would be Seek. I have never used Trade Me (for selling nor purchasing), but all my internet searches come back to Trade Me.I want to sell something for a fixed price. The item is too bulky to be shipped, so the buyer would have to pick up.I cannot find a site which tells me what the difference is between Trade Me and The Marketplace.So, is there a difference?
