Still, whether used on her own or in the context of an Arts team, sheġĀĀs a formidable asset to have, capable of inflicting high damage that ignores most of her foes'ĀĀdefensive measures.Paracelsus's claim to fame is his 3-turn NP Gain buff that he can provide to an ally of choice, with a value of up to +50%. Furthermore, his damage output is poor, even by Caster standards. She is only truly competent at one aspect, and lacks the versatility and buff percentages to compete with more rounded Berserkers. As is quite often the case with support-heavy Servants, they tend to buff others harder than they buff themselves.ĀĀOverall, Elisabeth is a good starter Servant, with female support and decent damage that will last a long time before competitive support options for all card types are available. But that is all he has.Past that Mana Burst-coated surface is a Servant with a skill set that completely lacks any form of synergy, utility, hard survivability, or serious damage potential. Furthermore, his access to only a single Buster card reduces his direct damage potential as well as making it more difficult to choose a right teammate for him. Indeed, if supplied with Critical Stars, Sherlock's high NP Gain allows him to rather easily trigger back-to-back NPs, all the while he demolishes the enemy with his own critical hits.ĀĀYet, while Sherlock offers a significant amount of support on his NP, his skills are largely selfish and mostly serve to help him gain access to his NP. Double Servant compositions are considered.ĀĀ5* Servants are excellent! Their performance often vastly outpaces those of lower rarities and each of them is worth investing in.
