Conditionals First Conditional This conditional This conditional is used to talk about future events that might happen. It uses the present tense to discuss the possible future events. For example: If it rains, we will have to cancel the picnic. If you come with me, I will make it worthwhile for you. If I go abroad, I will get something back for you. If you wait till 1 pm, you can go back with him. If you visit Paris, you must see the Eiffel Tower. Second Conditional This conditional This conditional This conditional This conditional is used to talk about the unreal possibility or impossible events. They establish the course of action that would follow, where something to happen is either hypothetical or surreal. For example: If I had a million dollars, I would buy a penthouse on Park Avenue.I could stop working if I won the lottery.If I were well-versed in the subject, I would ask her to marry me.What would you do if it were to rain later? Third Conditional This conditional This conditional talks about the past, unlike the first and second which discusses events in the real or unreal future. These conditions, too, are therefore impossible, because they have either already occurred or might have occurred but wont anymore. For example: If I had studied a little more in college, life would have easier. If we had gotten to the airport on time, we would have caught our flight. I could have asked him about the matter if he had shown up. Sometimes the if clause is merely implied, as in: I would have done it. (if you had asked me to) I wouldnt have allowed it. (if it had been tried with me) Zero conditional The zero conditional discusses an absolute certainty; the result of the conditional The zero conditional T water to zero degrees, it turns into ice. Zero conditionals, therefore, do not deal with the future or the past; they simply deal with facts. First vs zero conditional to talk about what happens in general. If you dont use oil, it tastes awful. (Im talkingabout what happens every time.) If you dont use oil, it will taste awful. (Im talking about this particular occasion.) Second conditional we use the second conditional to talk about hypothetical or imaginary situations in the present or the future. We can use past simple or past continuous in theif-clause and we can usewould, couldormight + simple infinitive (do) or continuous infinitive (be doing) in the main clause. If there was a fire, it would be impossible to escape. If you werent making so much noise, I could concentrate. I wouldn't have a car if I livedin the city. If it werent for him, I might not be talking to you right now. When we use the verbbe in theif-clause, we can use eitherwas (more formal) orwere (spoken English) afterI, he sheor it. But when we are giving advice, we always use ifI were you, Id call him as soon as possible. (NOTwas) As with all conditional types, we use a comma after theif-clause when it goes at the beginning of the sentence, but we dont use a comma when theif-clause goes at the end. If you werent making so much noise, I could concentrate of you werent making so much noise. Third conditional to talk about hypothetical or imaginary situations in the past, we can use the past perfect simple or past perfect continuous in theif-clause and we can usewould, couldormight + the perfect infinitive in the main clause. If you had come to class more often, you would have been late if I hadnt overslept. He could have died if he hadnt been wearing a helmet. If the jacket had been a bit cheaper, I might have bought it.

Conditionals! Learn conditional definition with examples. There are four types of conditional and zero conditional and zero conditional are structures in English that establish what will happen if a certain event takes place or if a certain action is performed.

This means that if a certain condition is true, a certain result occurs. There are four types of commonly used conditional in the English language that are differentiated on the basis of the degree of possibility implied by each of them.
