Google Maps is more than just a navigation app. From creating a list of your favorite places to reviews, it lets us do, view, and access various of features, including sharing our location. Oh yes, although not-so-popular, you can view and find someones location via Google Maps. While tracking someone without their consent raises ethical and privacy concerns, there are legitimate reasons for wanting to do so. For instance, tracking the activities of your kids or elderly to ensure their safety or locating a lost phone. This comprehensive guide will help you track someones location using a phone number on Google Maps. So, lets get going. Well, you cant really track a phone number on Google Maps, i.e., you cant just enter a phone number and ask Google to work its magic. However, you can track the phone associated with the Google ID/number with their permission. Simply put, if the phone owner has shared their location with you via Google Maps, you can track their whereabouts. It works almost exactly as sharing location through Apple devices, however, this hack can work on Android devices and iPhones. Consent, aka sharing permission The person you want to track must grant you permission to access their location information.Google Maps app Both you and your target should have the Google Maps application installed on their device.Location access to Google Maps The person youre tracking should give Google Maps app unhindered access to their devices location. Similar to how WhatsApp demands location access when sharing live locations via WhatsApp.Active Google Account You and the person you want to track must have active Google accounts. Moreover, you should be logged in to the Google Maps app with that ID. As the rules mention, you should have permission to track a person. So, there are two key steps to locating a phone number on Google Maps, sharing the location (the person you want to track) and finding their location (you) Note: People you share your location will also have access to, Your name and photo. The battery level of your device. The devices recent location even when Google apps arent being used. If Location Sharing notification is enabled, your arrival and departure time at the location. Step 1: Launch Google Maps and tap the profile picture. Step 2: Select Location sharing from the options. Step 3: Tap Share location. Step 4: Here, select the timing by tapping the For 1 hour drop-down menu. Step 5: You can select between, For 1 hour Until you turn this off Step 6: Finally, select the contact and tap Share. Youll receive a notification when someone shares their location via Google Maps. To track their location, you can either click on the notification or simply open Google Maps. Launch Google Maps profile picture Location Sharing. Here, you can view their current location. Moreover, you can even enable geofencing, i.e. get notifications when someone enters or exists a certain location. To do so, tap Add next to Notifications, add location, and toggle on the switch next to Every time they arrive and Every time they leave. Notably, the person youre tracking will receive a notification about the geofencing. Additionally, they can choose to turn off these notifications from their end as well. Not just Google Maps but apps like WhatsApp, Waze, and even Apple Maps can help you track someones live location. There are also parental control apps that can help you out. However, beware of apps or websites that claim to help you track someones phone number without their permission. While there are ways to do so, they all fall under a grey area and are illegal. Most countries across the globe have strict rules against it and chart it under punishable offense. So, feel free to track location using a phone number from the app of your choice, but ensure that you have their permission first. 1. How to track someones iPhone? Thanks to the iPhones built-in feature, Find My, you can track someones location or even find their lost iPhone or iPad. Although you either need their Apple ID credentials or their Share My Location feature should be enabled. 2. Can you track someone on Google Maps without them knowing? No, you cannot track someone on Google Maps without their knowledge or consent. Permission is required for both parties involved. Tracking someones location with a phone number on Google Maps can be a useful tool for various purposes. However, the key element to location sharing and tracking is the individuals consent and compliance with privacy laws. Hopefully, this article was able to help you manage the best of both worlds, tracking someones location while still respecting their privacy. Both you and your contact need to have the Google Maps mobile app to share locations with each other. You can easily find someone's location in Google Maps on your mobile device or on the web, and hide or unhide contacts as needed. Google Maps can give you peace of mind when it comes to your loved ones. Whether it's a school-aged child or an elderly family member, you can use Google Maps to find your family or friends' locations. Keep up with your kids by seeing when they arrive home, or check in on a close friend who has been traveling. With Google Maps online or on your mobile device, you can see where they are when you're worried. Request a Friend or Family Member's Location In order to share real-time locations between you and your contact, you'll both need the Google Maps mobile app. You can download it on Android or iPhone for free. You must also be willing to share your own location with your contact at least once. This is what gets the ball rolling for you to request their location. Open the Google Maps app on your mobile device to begin location sharing. You may need to adjust your settings to allow location services for Google Maps if prompted. Tap your profile photo or initial found in the top-right corner of the app window and select "Location Sharing." If you've never shared your location in Google Maps before, you'll need to share your spot with your contact before you can request theirs. Tap "New Share." Before you choose a contact, use the drop-down box to select a timeframe. You can share your location for a certain amount of time or until you turn it off. Next, select your contact, or scroll to the right and tap "More" to view all of your contacts. Pick one and tap "Share." Once you share your location, you can request that your contact share theirs with you. Select the contact, then tap "Request." You'll see a message that your email address will be shared with them, and you can opt to disable this same message in the future. Tap "Request" here as well. If you've shared your location with someone before, you'll see them at the bottom of the Location Sharing window. From there, you can share your spot with them again or simply request that they share theirs with you. Tap your contact at the bottom, pick "Request," then tap "Request" once more in the subsequent window. Your contact will receive a notification in Google Maps and via email that you've requested that they share their location. Once someone has agreed to share their location with you, you can find them easily in Google Maps on your mobile device or online. Find Someone on Mobile Open Google Maps on your mobile device, tap your profile photo or initial from the top right, and select "Location Sharing." You'll see those contacts sharing their location(s) with you at the bottom. Tap to view details about their location, get directions to them, or simply view their spot on the map. Find Someone Online Head to Google Maps online and sign in. Click the three-line menu button in the top-left corner next to the search box and choose "Location Sharing." Select the contact who is sharing their location with you. You'll see their photo or initials appear on the map along with the address for their current location on the left. Even though someone has shared their location with you, that doesn't mean that you want to see them on the map all the time. Maybe you already know they're safe and sound, and now you want to check on someone else. Luckily, you can hide a contact on the map if you like. Hide Someone on Mobile Go back to the Location Sharing screen in the app by tapping your profile photo or initial and "Location Sharing." Choose the contact at the bottom that you want to hide from the map. Tap the three dots on the top-right corner of their location details and pick "Hide [Name] From Map." To unhide a contact, tap the contact at the bottom of your location-sharing list. When the message appears at the top letting you know that they're hidden, tap "Unhide." Hide Someone Online Head back to the Location Sharing area of Google Maps online with Menu > Location Sharing. Select the contact you want to hide and click "Hide on Map" below their name. This will remove their photo or initial from your map view, although they will still appear in your location sharing list. To unhide a contact, hover your cursor over their name in your location sharing list and click "Show on Map." To stop seeing a contact's location completely and in the future, you have the option to block them. Otherwise, wait for the sharing timeframe to expire or hope that they decide to stop sharing their spot with you. You know what they say, sharing is caring! So if you want to check in on a loved one to make sure they're home or at their intended destination, put the features of Google Maps to work.
