How are NFL matchups scheduled? NFL matchups are scheduled using a rotation system involving divisional, intra-conference and inter-conference games. Each team plays 17 games throughout the season against teams within their division, teams from other divisions within the same conference, and teams from divisions in the opposite conference, with one additional game added under the new schedule format. How do injuries affect NFL matchups and betting odds? Injuries can significantly affect NFL matchups and betting odds. Key player injuries can lower a team's chances of winning, which can sway the betting odds, making the unaffected team more favored to win. What's the average score of the NFL game? The average score of an NFL game varies from season to season, but typically, teams tend to score on average between 20 to 25 points per game. For instance, in the 2020 season, the average combined score for both teams was about 49 points per game. Access up-to-date NFL odds from legal Sportsbooks in your area. The point spread, moneyline, and Over/Under are the three most common ways to bet on the NFL. Spread Point spread betting is the most common way to wager on football. The favorite will have a minus (-) next to its point spread and must win by more points than the spread to win the bet. The underdog will have a plus (+) next to its point spread and must win outright or lose by fewer points than the spread to win the bet. Learn more with our point spread guide. Check out upcoming NFL spreads and compare them across the top sportsbooks in the industry by selecting spread from the drop-down above the odds. Moneyline The moneyline is one of the easiest ways to bet on NFL odds, asking bettors to simply pick which team they think will win the game. When the odds screen is set to American odds, the moneyline favorite will have a minus (-) before the odds, while the underdog will usually be indicated by a plus (+). Learn more with our moneyline guide and calculate how much money you can win using our moneyline calculator. You can view upcoming NFL moneylines by selecting 'moneyline' from the drop-down above the odds. Over/Unders Over/Under or totals betting allows you to bet on the combined number of points scored in an NFL game. Oddsmakers will set an estimated point total for a game, and you can bet whether the final score will add up to more (Over) or less (Under) points than that total. Learn more with our Over/Under guide. All of the upcoming NFL Over/Under totals can be seen by choosing total from the drop-down above the odds. Futures NFL futures are odds on events that take an extended period to play out, such as odds to win the Super Bowl, NFL season win totals, or odds to win NFL MVP. Futures odds will change over the course of the season as they react to results, injuries, and betting action. Get the latest NFL futures odds on the Super Bowl as well as the odds to win the NFC and AFC Championship Games at our NFL futures page. If youre new to betting on the NFL, we have you covered. How are MLB matchups scheduled? MLB matchups are scheduled according to set format, wherein each team plays a total of 162 games in a regular season including inter-league play. How do injuries affect MLB matchups and betting odds? Injuries significantly affect MLB matchups and betting odds. If a key player, like a prime pitcher or a leading batter, is injured, the team's potential to perform decreases, which leads to adjusted betting odds. Therefore, bettors must always stay updated on player injury news for informed betting decisions. What's the average score of the MLB game? The average number of runs scored in an MLB game can vary from season to season, but it generally hovers around 4.5 runs per team per game. Therefore, roughly 9 total runs are scored on average in an MLB game. However, various factors such as pitching strength, offensive performance, weather conditions, and ballpark dimensions can contribute to the scoring trends in any given season or game. The moneyline is the most popular way to bet on baseball, but Over/Unders and the point spread (called the run line in baseball) are also very common. Moneyline The moneyline is the most common way to bet on lower-scoring sports like baseball as youre simply picking which team will win the game. The moneyline favorite will have a minus sign (-) before the odds and the underdog will be shown by a plus sign (+). Learn more with our moneyline guide and calculate how much you could win with our moneyline calculator. Updated moneyline odds can be seen by selecting ML above the odds tool. Run line The run line is baseballs version of the point spread. In the MLB, it is almost always set at 1.5 runs meaning the favorite (-1.5) needs to win the game by two or more runs, and the underdog (+1.5) can lose by one run or win the game outright. Learn more with our run line guide. Current run line odds can be seen by clicking the run line button above the odds tool. Over/Unders Over/Under odds, also known as totals, are another popular way to bet on the MLB. When wagering on Over/Under odds, youre making a bet as to whether the total runs combined will go Over or Under the number set by the sportsbook. Learn more with our Over/Under betting guide. See todays MLB Over/Under odds by choosing the total tab above the odds tool. Futures Betting on baseball futures means betting on an event that is later in time, such as the odds to win the World Series or which team will win the NL or AL pennant. These odds are posted during the offseason and take action until a winner is crowned. Learn more with our futures betting guide. You can switch to view MLB futures odds by clicking Team Futures in the right-hand corner of the odds page. The matchup between the starting pitchers is an important factor in how oddsmakers set the lines for each game. Its also a good place for bettors to start when handicapping baseball matchups.
