After the outbreak of the civil war in 1946, the British government, concerned about the impact of the war on the economy, decided to nationalize the coal industry. This was done through the Coal Industry Nationalization Act 1946, which transferred the ownership of the coal mines to the state. The new organization, the National Coal Board, was established to manage the coal industry and to ensure that the coal supply was sufficient to meet the needs of the economy.
