Does home depot have military discount on appliances

The Home Depot to Launch Tax-Free Major Appliances Program for Military Personnel Home Depot partners with Army & Air Force Exchange Service to offer tax-free major appliances to military shoppers The Home Depot has partnered with the Army & Air Force Exchange Service (Exchange) to launch its tax-free offering of major appliances to military shoppers, according to a statement released on May 18, 2023. Home Depot offers various military discounts, but there are some changes to be aware of. The Home Depot offers a military discount for active and retired military personnel. To apply the discount in-store, customers need to access The Home Depot's app on their smartphone, as the QR code is not available on the website due to regular updates. However, shoppers can still use their online account to receive the discount automatically at checkout. In some cases, it may be more convenient to shop online and pick up orders in-store or have them shipped home. It's essential to check local advertisements for sales and promotions that may vary by location. Home Depot's military discount has certain restrictions, including a maximum annual cap of $400 per year and exclusions on items like appliances, gift cards, and labor services. Additionally, the discount is for personal use only and cannot be combined with contractor discounts unless storewide deals are involved. Customers should review the information provided to ensure they qualify for the discount and understand its limitations. Home Depot offers various benefits for military families and veterans, including tax-free shopping, free shipping on major appliances, and a 10% discount on non-appliance merchandise. The company's partnerships with Army & Air Force Exchange Service and Navy Exchange provide significant savings to eligible customers. Additionally, Home Depot has expanded its military moving hub to make the relocation process more efficient for active service members. Home Depot partners with military exchanges to offer exclusive discounts on appliances purchased through the exchange system. The new program, set to launch next year, will provide a discount on Home Depot-sourced appliances bought through the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) and Navy Exchange (NEX). The discount will be accessed online or in-store at the exchange locations and is expected to offer significant savings for military and veteran shoppers.
