Having no personal motives and desires will be natural with a person of this awareness — the awareness of one-self finding one with the whole, having no desire to possess the wealth of others being part of it.

The line mā gṛdhaḥ kasyasvid dhanam is interpretable in two ways. One is by putting a fullstop between gṛdhaḥ and kasyasvit. Then the line would mean, “Do not have any desire. Whose is wealth?” The answer to the question is, “All wealth is owned by Īśa.” In the light of this, owning personal possessions is meaningless. The second interpretation is to treat the whole line as one sentence. Then it means, “Do not desire anyone’s wealth.”

Dhana is the word used here to denote wealth. Derived from the root dhan, meaning “to yield fruit,” the word literally means, “that which yields the fruit of satisfaction.”

Perceiving Īśa or Brahman alone in everything is the essential content of wisdom (jñāna). A person that follows the perception portrayed in this first mantra attains his or her oneness in all respects with the Total, through wisdom or jñāna, and hence he or she could be considered a jñāna-yogin.

Now we come to the alternative way of attaining oneness with the Total. This is the path of a karma-yogin.
